Questions

1. Children and adults tend to learn better in a traditional classroom environment.
2. As trainers, we should tell the participants just to “sit back and listen” since it is our job to “teach” them.
3. Adults bring a background of unique experiences into the classroom which can be of great value to the training.
4. Adults will learn something new when they “need” to learn something new which is why, as trainers, we must appeal to our audience so that the participants feel as if “they need to know” the information we are giving to them.
5. All adults learn the same; therefore, it is not important to adapt your presentation style to the participants learning styles.
6. It does not matter how we dress when making a presentation, only that we arrive on time.
7. When giving a presentation, a trainer should ALWAYS use an opening, body, and conclusion.
8. Breaks are not important; what is important is getting through all of the material in your lesson plan.

9. As trainers, we should all be mindful of our voice, careful not to become monotone.
10. While students in a traditional learning environment rely on others to decide what is important to be learned, participants in an adult learning environment decide for themselves what is important to be learned.
